

Why I volunteer for South West London Law Centres

March 2019

Christine Slevin has specialised in employment law for many years and has a fundamental belief that employers' rights are equal to the rights of employees.

Much of Christine Slevin's day-to-day work focuses on advising employers and she wanted to give something back to the community; to the individual, while gaining beneficial life experience and expertise.

The Merton & Sutton South West London Law Centre, gives Christine the opportunity to connect with people from all walks of life. She enjoys helping people from different cultures, socio-economic situations, political ideologies and a host of other backgrounds who, without the assistance of the South West London Law Centres, might not have access to justice at all.

South West London Law Centres is a Legal Aid practice and a registered charity, providing specialist advice, casework and representation in social welfare law in the south west of London. They run weekly pro bono clinics for initial advice and assistance and operate on a not for profit basis.
